1. My dearest members of the Christ Community. Let us rejoice that peace is always an option. It is always available to us. Christ no longer has skin in the game. Its nature isn't competitive, so it doesn't care about the core principles that people fight about. Christ only promotes peace. That's all. How does Christ respond to situations involving aggressive acts by nations, or by groups, or by individuals? Is it always passive? Does it always just stand by and let cruelty take place? Let's talk about this.

2. Christ is God in humankind. Christ is a spiritual entity, a soul, within the confines of the human body. It uses the body to serve the Oneself in very specific ways that complement its host character's interests, skills, and abilities. It extends itself through extension. It always seeks to connect with and strengthen other souls, even in passing. It is always actively engaged and is never passive, although no set of human eyes would ever see this. They would describe an individual Christ as being passive, a Buddha on top of a mountain, but they aren't seeing or understanding what is really transpiring.

3. Christ is outside of the conflict. It may prompt its host to serve in an unlimited amount of ways, each of which will only promote unconditional love towards all. Now, let's return to the topic of cruelty. Please review the Ten Powers of Christ in the Journey series book "A Shock to the System". Read it again and again and again. It will help you to know how the power of Christ can work through you to change a specific situation involving cruelty and to help characters to not engage in this as aggressors or as targets. More to come.

4. Love and blessings,
Mother Mary

1. To continue our conversation, Christ has an entirely different perspective than the ego. To apply this set of perspectives to what is currently transpiring in America, let's look at the mass deportation raids. An individual ego may support these raids while another one protests to stop them. Both are involved in the conflict. A protestor may even attempt to pull an immigrant away from arresting officers.
2. Christ, on the other hand, extends love to those who support the deportations and to those who are against them. Christ blesses both groups' souls to help them in these very difficult situations. Christ doesn't take sides because it works in invisible ways. It works from the inside out. It is truly a hidden weapon, even though I don't like the word weapon. Let's use the term remedy instead. Christ always promotes peace, which stems from the internal quality of serenity. These are both remedies to the ego mind's right/wrong, good/bad dualities.
3. So, no, Christ would not encourage its host character to put itself in harm's way by pulling an immigrant away from an arresting officer, or by throwing things at them, or setting cars on fire. Christ sees this situation and pretty much all situations as a call for love and blessings to all involved parties, not just some of them. It is a very, very different point of view, as you are each well aware of.
4. Christ, or more specifically, becoming Christ, is the only option left in a world that has run out of options. The ego has run its course. There is a better way. I will be with you again in July.
5. Love and blessings,
Mother Mary
